USDOJ Redesigns ADA Website

PLEASE NOTE that the following notice from the US Department of Justice arrived in DOI's mailbox Friday afternoon, May 17, 2013.

In the first re-design of the ADA website since 2002, the Department of Justice today launched a redesigned ADA website ADA.gov. The new design incorporates improved navigation and usability features making it easier to find information on ADA technical assistance, enforcement, and regulations.

To view the new website or to find more information about the ADA, visit ADA.gov or call the Department's ADA Information Line at 800-514-0301 (voice) or 800-514-0383 (TTY).

What I have been told is that USDOJ has successfully transferred 8000 documents in the first redesign of their website in the past twelve years. What they have is a new streamlined website that will shock you into thinking:

1. Where is the 2010 ADA Standards?
2. Where is all the pool information?
3. Where are all the old familiar things I could find from before???

Fear not, everyone. Look to the bar across the top. It is your journey into enlightenment and back to clear organization. Would I lead you astray?

Law / Regulations

Design Standards

Technical Assistance Materials

Enforcement

This was a quick summary of the new website – it is a great new classy remake and ever so much simple to use and find things on. Please visit and give it a try!

Almost everything you need is under Law/Regulations: Text of the ADA, State and Local Governments, (Title II), Public Accommodations (Title III), ADA Standards for Accessible Design, Compliance Extension for Existing Pools, Proposed Regulations.

Design Standards has the 2012 ADA Standards for Accessible Design as well as Guidance on the Design Standards.

Technical Assistance Materials is exactly that. A number of excellent handout materials to assist designers in doing what they do.

Enforcement is what happens when non-compliance is discovered and settlement agreements are reached. Project Civic Access is located here.
